THE WHYS AND WHEREFORES OF WIFE DESERTION NAMED

Men who are common laborers seldom desert their wives, according to a survey of the reasons for desertion in Chicago, being made by Mrs. Leonora Z. Meder, commissioner of the public welfare bureau.

The survey discovered that there was seldom a desertion where there was a family of children and rarely one in an Italian family.

Wives most often deserted were those weak physically, or who were extravagant, untidy, nagging, did not desire children or had husbands with large salaries.

The highest percentage of desertions was in American-born families.
